Main topic and thematic units

The programme develops environmental awareness through the study of local streams, their history, geography, ecological role, current pressures and importance for biodiversity and urban resilience.

Educational objectives

Students learn how streams function as ecosystems, observe local biodiversity, identify pollution and human pressures, practise field research and propose actions for protection and public awareness.

Implementation methodology

Field observation, mapping, photography, simple measurements, research, teamwork, contact with environmental bodies and the creation of posters and information material are used.

Duration and start

Sixteen weeks, one one-hour meeting per week, beginning around mid-December 2025.

Visits and partnerships

Field research at the streams, a visit to the Environmental Education Centre of Argyroupoli and a visit to a protected habitat outside Attica are planned.

Links with the curriculum

The programme links natural sciences, geography, technology, environmental protection, data collection, digital mapping and communication.

Dissemination

Student diaries, maps, photographs, posters, presentations and conference participation will communicate the findings.

Evaluation

Feedback questionnaires, evaluation of produced material, participation observation and student presentations will be used.

Timeline

The sequence includes introduction and mapping, field visits and observation, data processing, preparation of proposals and final presentation.
