Main topic and thematic units

The programme connects students with personal and family history, cultural heritage and intergenerational memory through oral-history interviews and family-tree research.

Educational objectives

Students understand oral history as a means of preserving memory, research and record their family tree, practise interviewing and documentation, and develop communication, creativity and respect for diverse family experiences.

Implementation methodology

Individual research develops into group collaboration. Students prepare interviews, collect photographs and documents, organise material and create stories, poems, comics or digital family trees.

Duration and start

Sixteen weeks, one one-hour meeting per week, beginning with a programme launch event at the Laboratory Centre.

Visits and partnerships

Visits may include a folklore museum, oral-history organisations and the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens for discussion with oral-history researchers.

Links with the curriculum

The programme connects history, language, literature, arts, digital documentation and local cultural heritage.

Dissemination

Students present family trees and creative narratives. Selected work may form an exhibition or digital archive.

Evaluation

Participation, cooperation, interviews, collected evidence, creative products, reflection and student questionnaires will be evaluated.

Timeline

Introduction to oral history is followed by interview preparation, fieldwork with family members, documentation, creation of family trees and final presentation.
